

Elijah Robert
Dr. Jason Woodworth
9/24/2025
CMPS 327 – 01

A Curious World in Moonlight

In a far-off dimension, there rests a small, shattered fragment of a world that was once whole. Here, time seemed to stand still, and the moon ever shone over the people who remained there. Their lives were happy, though quiet and peaceful. They never fought over resources, as the land seemed to create what they needed to survive. They endeavored only to make a better life for all who resided there, and to explore what little world they had around them.

The land seems oddly infertile to the naked eye, but grass and plant life sprouts sporadically throughout what little land they have. These grasses sprout and flower from the Luna Pool, a small well of water near the far corner of the land. The people of the land do not currently remember their name, or if they had once before the land shattered. They do remember their reverence of the moon, and how important its power to grow the land and restore the people is. The people face harsh elements at random and sometimes plagues, but the healing power of the secluded pool is always enough to restore and heal them to see through it.

The people have tried their hands at crafts over time. They gradually have managed to build strange structures, so it is believed that due to their odd designs that it was not all made physically, however whether magic or other sources were involved is still unknown for certain. A set of stairs can be seen leading to somewhere, and a building that sometimes lacks its entrance and rooms within is also visible to most who would visit. Though seldom, the plane does receive visitors every so often, when a traveler happens to fall out of their dimension or if someone from the main planet deigns to check in on them. They are not offered help from the main world, instead they are left behind to fend for themselves while the mainlanders can do as they please. However, whether to visit family or friends, every so often it is believed that a shooting star can be seen on its way to the plane, a ship holding people dear to everyone in the Luna Plane.

Further research will be done in the coming days to determine what the people of the plane intend to do next, but as of now they live in peace and without much fear. The Pool sustains them, and they keep their friends and families close at hand. While it is difficult to traverse the plane, if at all possible, the sight is very peculiar, and the sky is wondrous to behold. If you plan to visit, do visit the Luna Pool. You may find something odd around it.